

Design Document: Project 1- Personal Web-page

Project Description:

This project serves as a personal website that focuses on showing information about who I am, my interests, and past work. Its main purpose is to have an online space in which anyone interested in my work and past experience can explore and learn more about me. It consists of multiple web pages that can be accessed through buttons at any page. On top of each page you will find access to the following pages: Welcome, About, Experience, Projects, and Contact. The welcome page has a short introduction message. The about page lists my education, a few hobbies, and some music. The Experience list my most current job experiences. The projects page holds an animated loading logo. I am new to this field so I do not have many projects. This page will soon be filled as I continue my computer science journey. The contact page has my email and other social media to get intouch.

On top of welcoming some with a message, I added a unique feature in which a user can listen to music on the first page when they press the play music button. As well, there is a coding music playlist in the about page that shares a coding work environment playlist with others who come across my page.

Users Personas:

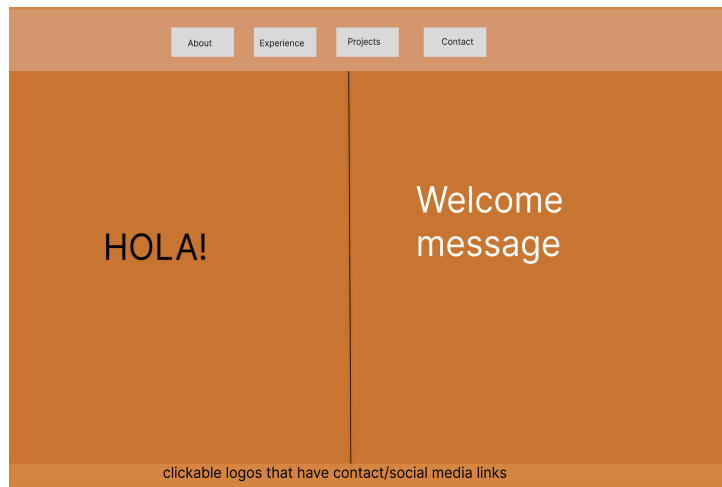

- Recruiters who are interested in my technical skills
- Hiring Managers interested my past work experience
- Peers/friends/professors who want to know more about me

User Stories:

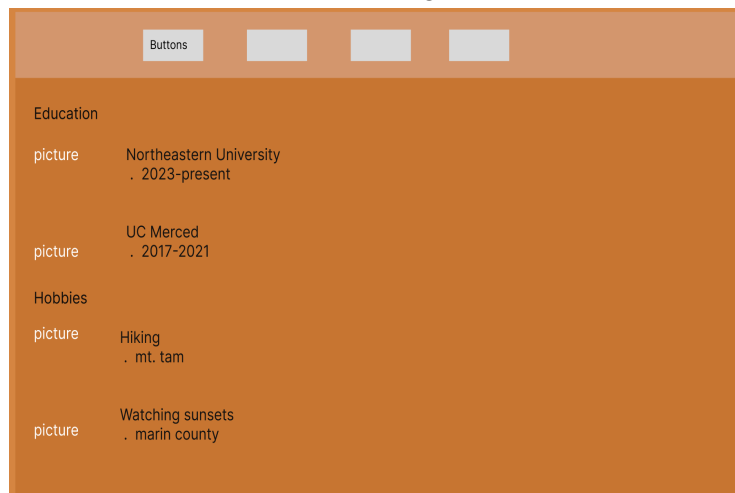

- A recruiter is interested in my technical skills. They can access my projects page and explore the projects and technologies used to see my level of experience. As well this website serves as a live project that demonstrates my skills.
- A Hiring Manager is interested in my work and past experience. They can access my experience page to see where and what is my most recent work experience
- A peer or friend is interested in learning more about who I am. They can access the about page to see my education, hobbies, and interests.
